

EVENING BULLETIN.

THURSDAY EVENING, AUGUST 13, 1857.

AN ECONOMICAL LITERATEUR.—A correspondent of the Boston Courier, who attended the recent commencement of Bowdoin College, thus describes a character whom he encountered on that occasion:

One of the alumni pointed out to me this afternoon a short, elderly man, with a pale face and a generally wan look, whom he introduced as Curtis. Whether he have any prefix or suffix to his name, or whether, like the heroes of old, one name suffices for him, I do not know. He has been here a number of years, and gathers a hard-earned support from menial services from the students. He blacks their boots, builds their fires, and works early and late. He lives in a sort of hut alone, and prepares his own food. His expense for board in summer amounts to about thirteen cents per week, and in winter is but a few cents less. All his money is devoted to the purchase of books. He is a large and retentive reader, and is well informed on almost all subjects. I am informed that in his little hut he has thousands of volumes stored away, which he announces his intention of bequeathing to the college. His Cockney pronunciation shows him to be English, but of his early life no one knows but himself, and he is wholly reticent. I am promised a visit to his house, and if I go will tell you more of him and his library. He is another of those mysteries which abound in our country—country of which fifty cent postasters and story tellers complain that it lacks subjects for romance.

This famous character, we learn from a graduate of Bowdoin, is universally known among the students as "Diogenes." He keeps all facts of his history a profound secret—except that occasionally, after inbibing too freely, he drops a few mysterious hints about his early life. His great delight is, after a few days of indulgence, to go to the college rooms long before daylight, and recite from memory pages from Pope, Dryden, Rogers, Campbell, and others of his favorite poets. His coming is heralded by his shrill whistling of a multitude of martial airs. His library, which he keeps stowed away in chests, in the shanty in which he sleeps, will probably be bequeathed, in accordance with his oft-repeated determination, to the libraries of the College, over whose welfare he considers himself as having the chief care.

THE FIVE POINTS.—The following paragraph from the New York Express gives an idea of the fearful accretion of vice and squalor in the field of labor occupied by the Five Points Mission:

In attending to his duties recently, Mr. Pease found a dying woman in a foul apartment in Cow Bay, occupied, also, by eight other women and one man, all drunk and debased and infamous in the last extreme. In the upper end of the same pestilential court or close were found, in fifteen rooms, twenty-three families, making an aggregate of one hundred and seventy-nine persons, or twelve to a room! In five of these fifteen rooms intoxicating liquors were kept for sale! Indescribable filth, privations, disease, and indecency reigned through them all. Yet seventeen children from these rooms attend the schools of the House of Industry. In eleven other rooms were eighteen families, and in nearly half of these rooms ardent spirits are sold. In one of the garrets lived two negroes with eleven abandoned white women. In twelve other rooms were found twenty-four families, consisting of one hundred and twenty-four persons. Here were two blind women, two just past the peril of child-birth, and seventy-one were children, only eight of whom attended any school.

THE FIRST AMERICAN NEWSPAPER.—A correspondent of Notes and Queries gives an abstract of the contents of the first American newspaper, printed at Boston in 1690. A copy is in the State paper office, London. After a preamble or introduction, pointing out the designs of this publication, which is to be monthly, or often, it states that the Christianized Indians in some parts of Plymouth appoint a day of thanksgiving (a good example) for the mercies of God in supplying the late want of corn and giving them the prospect of a comfortable harvest. Notwithstanding the great drawback in the departure of forces for Canada, the favorableness of the season has prevented their feeling the lack of laboring hands. Two children, aged eleven and nine years, belonging to an inhabitant of Chelmsford, missing, supposed to be fallen into the hands of the Indians. At Watertown, an old man having recently buried his wife and fallen into a melancholy mood, hanged himself. Prevalence of fevers and agues; in some parts malignant fever runs through a whole family, often proving mortal. The smallpox, which has been raging in Boston, now much abated—more cases, although not so mortal, than when it visited them twelve years ago. The number of deaths in the visitation from the complaint in Boston about 320, June, July, and August being the most obnoxious months. Prayers oftentimes in the congregations for above 100 sick. It even affected children in utero. There was a great fire a few weeks since in Boston, with 20 houses near the Millcreek burned. Another fire broke out about midnight between the 16th and 17th instant, near the South Meeting House, which consumed about five or six houses. The meeting house, a handsome edifice, most wonderfully preserved. In the house where the fire originated a young man lost his life. The best furnished printing press in America destroyed also, a loss not easily repaired.

Arrival at Piscataqua of one Papeon, in a shallop from Penobscot, whence he had run away. He belonged to a small vessel bound from Bristol to Virginia that put in at Penobscot through distress, when the Indians and French seized her and butchered the master and several of the men. Account of the Western expedition against Canada. An army of near 2500 men and a navy of thirty-two sail started under the command of Sir William Phillips. Meanwhile the English in the West raised forces to the number of 500 or 600, with Gen. Winthrop at their head. The Marquis joined him. Other Indian nations expected, but they disappoint him. The Marquis invade the French territory with some success, but not great barbary. Misunderstanding between the General and the Lieutenant Gov. of New York on the return of the former to Albany. Two English captives escaped from the Indians and French at Pescadamoqua came into Portsmouth the 10th inst., and relate an account of the barbarities exercised at Fort Real, by Capt. Mason or the Indians, who in return butchered forty of our people who were captives. Letters of news arrived via Barbadoes, to Captain H. K., of the 10th of August. Account from Plymouth of September 22. Peggyscot Fort surrounded on the night of the 12th inst., but not finding any Indians they marched to Amonscoggin. There, on the Lord's day, they killed fifteen or sixteen of the enemy, and recovered five English captives. At Macquoy, young Brack makes his escape. They land at Saco and meet with similar success, taking nine canoes and an English captive named Thomas Baker, &c. Engagement with the Indians at Casco Bay, &c. Various losses enumerated, &c.

SHAMEFUL OUTRAGE IN LYNCHBURG.—The old Methodist church in Lynchburg, Virginia, on Sunday night, August 9, was the theatre of a shameful outrage. It is thus noticed in the Lynchburg Courier:

It appears that, on Sunday night last, a sacrilegious wretch managed to obtain access to the gasometer and let off all the water. The consequence was that the gas soon went out, leaving the church in total darkness. Then it was that the same wretch, together with his accomplices, scattered many pounds of finely powdered pepper on the floor, benches, railings, and elsewhere. The house was densely crowded, and after the gas was lighted again, and while the preacher was in the midst of a stirring appeal to the consciences of his hearers, the ladies commenced to pluck their fans and the persons standing in the aisle to move about to get a little fresh air. This roused up the powdered pepper and started the whole congregation to coughing and sneezing at a rate so terrible as to put a speedy stop to the services. Unable to endure their sufferings, many of the congregation rose up and made for the doors. The doors could not be opened. There were wretches outside holding them with ropes. How long this state of things lasted we were not told. What the consequences must have been we leave to be imagined.

EUROPEAN NEWS BY THE FULTON.

Great Britain.—In the House of Commons Lord John Russell moved an address be presented to the Queen, assuring her that the House would cordially support the Government in any efforts necessary to suppress the disturbances and in any measures which might be required to secure tranquillity and contentment in India. It was unanimously agreed to.

As the Agamemnon was weighing anchor in the Thames, a serious accident occurred, by the captain running away with the men at the bars; fifteen men were more or less injured, some of them badly. The Agamemnon left Sheerness for Cork on the 27th, and it was supposed that all the vessels would be at the rendezvous by the time the Indian left Liverpool. The greatest confidence was manifested in the successful accomplishment of the enterprise.

The utmost despatch was being used in the shipment of troops to India.

The general conference of the Wesleyan Church was in session at Liverpool. The Manchester Ladies' Anti-Slavery Society had protested against the reception of Bishop Simpson and Dr. McClintock, as delegates from the Methodist Church of America.

France.—Nearly all the parties charged by the Moniteur with being accomplices in the recent conspiracy have emphatically denied the charges.

In the London newspapers, Ledru Rollin, in particular, was very bitter against the Moniteur and the French Emperor, and appeals to the British Court in justice to refute the charge, as also do some of the others.

Letters from Paris intimate that there is sufficient evidence to convict Ledru Rollin, and other parties charged by the Moniteur with complicity in the conspiracy against the Emperor, and that consequently France will be in a position to demand their extradition from England as criminals. It is intimated, however, that the French government will content itself by simply asking England to transport the parties convicted across the Atlantic.

Germany.—A despatch from Berlin says that the governments who are parties to the Zollverein collectively claim from England indemnity for the losses sustained by their subjects at Canton, the bombardment having taken place without previous intimation to their consuls.

Great consternation prevailed along the Moselle, on account of serious conflagrations, which had destroyed small towns, villages, and forests. It was believed to be the work of incendiaries.

(From the London Times, July 29.)

The East India Mutiny.—The mail which left Bombay on the 1st of this month, sixteen days after the previous departure, may be considered to report affairs as unchanged as they could be in that interval. The mutiny had continued to spread in the Bengal army, which was to be foreseen; but it had evidently not exceeded its original bounds. Delhi had not been captured, but the insurgents had betrayed the weakness of their position by some considerable sorties, and their own want of courage, discipline, or generalship by being beaten with great slaughter. So far as regards the besiegers and besieged, time would be in favor of the former, injurious as the example would be in other parts of India. The peaceful and industrious population of Bengal Proper watch the struggle much to do, only having much more to lose and much less to do. However, as a measure of precaution, the native regiments at Calcutta and Barrackpore had been quietly disarmed. At Madras there was an uneasy feeling, but neither there nor at Bombay was there the slightest sign of disaffection. Nothing is reported of the Punjab.

Here, then, it is evident that the mutiny is confined to the Northwest Provinces, far in the interior, and surrounded by a circle of order and loyalty. On every side our basis of operation is undisturbed, and, at the very worst, it is now very little more than one of those local wars with a State or confederacy, such as we have had a dozen times over since the beginning of the century. We have no wish whatever to make the best of the news, but it certainly costs a little violence to torture more out of it.

The worst is told when it is stated that Delhi was still in the hands of the insurgents, but when we know that General Barnard had only three or four thousand Europeans, while the insurgents were much more numerous, and, in addition to a fanatical population, better provided with artillery and ammunition, we can make allowance for the policy of not bringing the struggle to an immediate issue within the ramparts and streets of the city. Every week is now adding to the European force at the disposal of the Commander-in-Chief in Bengal, and by this time he must have diverted a considerable part of the Chinese expedition to a more urgent purpose.

As fast as reinforcements arrive at Calcutta, and at the great cities on the Ganges, the mutineers higher up will feel the ground sinking under them, and the toils drawing closer round their lair. Unable to make an impression on any British encampment, short of supplies, and waiting the slow onward march of an irresistible foe, they will soon find disunion and treachery in their own ranks, and those who are still in a condition to make terms for themselves, will avoid the evil partnership of men whose crimes are past forgivness.

These incurable though unsuccessful intriguers, the ex-King of Oude and his Minister, had been detected in correspondence with the mutineers, and put out of harm's way in Fort William. It will be remembered that before the annexation of Oude the weakness of the Royal Family and its utter want of principle had drawn it into the habit of intriguing with one faction against another, and Mahomedans and Hindoos were destroying one another, both with the royal warrant. These intrigues, it was said in those days, necessarily ramified throughout all India, as there was hardly a regiment in our service in which was not to be found both Mahomedans and Hindoos with relations and friends in the kingdom of Oude, and engaged in its quarrels. It was not to be expected that his ex-Majesty could keep long out of his own element of faction. Whether he had much hand in causing the mutiny is of little importance; but so long as he was at large he probably had no more power of keeping clear of it than that of a scifflie: he is a spoilt child; perhaps the only one; he and the dog are constant companions, and neither is happy unless engaged in some scrape; and the neighborhood is no doubt in trouble all the time with their pranks."

"The owner of that dog," said the General, as a fine pointer, with a steel chain collar around his neck passed, "is a gentleman of education and property. He lives well, dresses well; has a fine house (the best house in town, quoth the landlord), enjoys himself rationally, is fond of society, a sportsman, (that is to say), is generally popular and on good terms with his neighbors. How is that, landlord?"

"True as a die," said the landlord, "the very man."

Just then a little wiry Scotch terrier darted from under a garden gate, opposite, and rushed up street after a flock of chickens. "The owner of that dog," said the speaker, "is a boy about fourteen or fifteen years of age. A sly little rogue, always about some scifflie: he is a spoilt child; perhaps the only one; he and the dog are constant companions, and neither is happy unless engaged in some scrape; and the neighborhood is no doubt in trouble all the time with their pranks."

"By jolly!" said the landlord, "there's something in this here dogology. That boy is just such a boy as you say he is, stranger!"

"The owner of that dog," continued the General, as a pug-nosed bull-dog, with great wrinkles on his cheeks, short, belligerent ears, heavy, thick eyes, broad chest, bandy forelegs, and a tail that looked bad, no more power of keeping clear of it than that of a scifflie: he is a spoilt child; perhaps the only one; he and the dog are constant companions, and neither is happy unless engaged in some scrape; and the neighborhood is no doubt in trouble all the time with their pranks."

"By thunder!" said the landlord, "you've got him again. The owner of that bull-dog is a Dutch butcher. He don't talk, for he can't speak English good; he don't take no interest in public matters, cause he can't vote, and he's obstinate as a mule, as I know, for he always gets more pounds of meat on his bill than there is in his weight, and he won't take off a cent neither."

"That dog," said General Leslie, elevating his voice, for he was very much elated with his success so far, and he saw a capital specimen of the bold terrier coming up the road—a union of ferocity and cunning—heavy-headed, lank-bodied, broad-breasted, eyes like coals of fire, ears and tail cropped for rough and tumble fighting—"that dog, gentleman, is owned by a man who is probably the worst man in this town, if not in the State of Kentucky. He is destitute of honor and principle, and would not hesitate to take the life of any man for the sake of a few dollars."

He here was interrupted by a voice in the crowd:

"Look here, stranger, you're making a little too free with my character," said Gard! "That dog belongs to me!" and the speaker pushed his way through the crowd and confronted the dogologist.

"My friend," said the General calmly, pushing back the hair from his high forehead, "I want to ask you a question—where did you get that dog?"

"By Gard!" said the man, "I raised him."

"Then," said the General, "I've lost the drinks."

It is supposed that the communications with this agent delayed the answer of the Spanish Minister to the offer made by Lord Howden and his colleague, the acceptance, if what is currently reported in Madrid be true, being couched in rather ambiguous and not over-gracious terms. It is also stated that the Spanish Government was informed in very plain and unmistakeable terms, that if the mediation was rejected Spain must not count on any assistance from either England or France, whatever untoward circumstances might arise to her out of war with Mexico. This intimation, perhaps, hurt the susceptibility of the Spanish Government, but fear has been even stronger than pride, and the mediation has been accepted, as I have just mentioned, after much hesitation and difficulty; so at least my letters state as the news of the day. The British and French Ministers have carried out the desire of their respective Governments, and acted throughout this affair in the same spirit.

DR. CATLIN.—The New York Times, of Tuesday, has the following:

A Visit to Dr. Catlin.—One of our reporters visited Dr. Catlin in the Tombs yesterday, and found him acting as warden of the third corridor. He professed to be quite comfortable. Touching the rumor (which good authority assures us to be more than rumor), that the Doctor personated Dr. Burdell on the 28th of October, the eventful night of the alleged marriage, he protested that he was ready to contest that point and was not afraid of the result. He called attention to the fact that he was not so tall as Burdell. Such is indeed the case, but otherwise Dr. Catlin does bear no indifferent likeness to the murdered man. He complains that the newspapers have not done him justice—says that he devoutly believed Mrs. Cunningham's statements until this exposure, but is now convinced that she is a vile woman. Of her unfortunate daughters he cannot be brought to think anything harsh. But for his sympathy with them he says he would not be.

DOGOGY.—A NEW SCIENCE.—Anecdote of Gen. Leslie Combs.—Although a veteran of the war of 1812, and one of its bravest, General Combs still retains the sprightliness of youth; his head is erect, his back straight as a pine tree, his eye bright as a game-cock's, and his laugh as cheerful as the carol of a bird in nesting time. All these qualities are doubtless owing to an internal well-spring of wit and humor, as certain to keep the outer man fresh and verdurous as the spray of a fountain will keep its borders in perpetual bloom. One day the General was traveling in a stage coach with one of those unhappy philosophers who bestow more attention upon the lumps on their skull than on the linings thereof, yclept phrenologists. Of course everybody in the stage was bored by this professor, until the General drew him into an unlucky ambuscade. "Sir," said Leslie, "I used to be of opinion that this science was neither correct nor founded upon proper grounds, although I had never given the subject the attention I now find it merits; but I am convinced, from the very able discourse you have given us, that your theory is a just one, and of no little consequence when we need to make an estimate of the characters and dispositions of men. But although I had no great faith in it, yet I was sometimes struck with the resemblances in its leading features to a science with which I am familiar, and by which I am in a great measure guided in my intercourse with strangers!"

"I presume," interrupted the Professor, with a smile of satisfaction, "you allude to physiognomy?" "No, sir," replied the general "my science is dogology."

"Dogology?" echoed the Professor, aghast.

"Dogology," said the General, with a winning smile, "I can always tell by the appearance of a dog what sort of a man his master is."

"Sir," replied the phrenologist, drawing himself up stiffer, "I see your intention is to cast ridicule upon my science."

"Pardon me," said the General, with the most amiable expression of countenance. "I will convince you to the contrary. At the next town where we stop for dinner, and which I have never visited before, I will tell you from the dogs in the street what sort of men their owners are. And if I fail to do so, I will forfeit the drinks for the whole stage load of passengers."

"Oh, yes! that you could readily make up a fanciful theory, I am convinced, and draw an imaginary character for that of the master of every dog, I have tolerably good reasons for believing. But how am I to tell whether you are correct or not? I am a stranger here as well as yourself," said the wary professor.

"We will leave the decision to the landlord of the tavern where we stop. He must know every person in the place," replied the General.

"Agreed," said the phrenologist, winking at the other passengers, and regaining his self-satisfied air.

"I agree to that, and will forfeit the drinks if the landlord's account tallies with your descriptions."

On arriving at the tavern, dinner was speedily discussed, the passengers being anxious to enjoy the exhibition of this novel science. The General beckoned the landlord out of the bar-room. This drew all the idlers with him, so that with them and the passengers there was a tolerably large group in front of the tavern, and of course this attracted other persons to see what was going on; so that, by the time the landlord had been made acquainted with his duties as arbiter, quite a respectable audience was collected—in numbers, at least.

"The owner of that dog," said the General, as a fine pointer, with a steel chain collar around his neck passed, "is a gentleman of education and property. He lives well, dresses well; has a fine house (the best house in town, quoth the landlord), enjoys himself rationally, is fond of society, a sportsman, (that is to say), is generally popular and on good terms with his neighbors. How is that, landlord?"
